NEWFOUNDLAND'S FISHERIES.

Cod the Great Staple and Forms Five-Eighths of Exports.

Many Million Dollars' Worth of Fish Sent Out Last Year.

A correspondent to the Halifax Chronicle, in making a resume of the Newfoundland fisheries says that the herring fishery at Labrador has ceased to exist. The catch in Placentia Bay last season was a failure. At Fortune Bay it was a failure. It was very successful at Bay of Islands and Bonne Bay on the West Coast. Herring are now cured for the United States market after the Scottish method with greater profit to the fishermen.

To protect the fisheries, the colony employs fifty wards, two steamers, one schooner, three yachts and one boat. By this means the illegal selling of bait to French fishermen is prevented. As a result, the French cod fishery has been greatly hampered and the catch reduced.

The fisherman complain that while Newfoundland is put to much expense in protecting her fisheries and preventing bait being shipped to St. Pierre, the French bankers were able to obtain herring bait at Sydney and Magdalen Islands. Every French vessel calling for bait would leave at these places $100.

The cod fishery is prosecuted either along the coasts or on the banks. Cod is a great staple, three-quarters of the population being interested in it, and forming five-eighths of the exports. The total cod exports last year amounted to $5,570,756, Brazil being the greatest market, 458,249 quintals valued at $2,099,901 being exported. To the United States 37,594 quintals, valued at $154,749 was exported.

Of other fish, 40,058 barrels of frozen herring valued at $62,132 and 72,037 bbis. of pickled herring valued at $100,281 were exported, making a total product of the fisheries amounting to $6,907,949 against $7,015,964 in 1900 and $5,889,135 in 1899.

The lobster business along the Newfoundland coasts as along the Gulf shores is overdone. Lobsters have been fished to death.
